

Monthly commentary

“ Witan’s NAV total return of -1.6% lagged its benchmark total return of -0.4% in May. The company remains ahead of benchmark over the year to date, as well as over the last one and three years. ”

Global markets were barely changed at the aggregate level in May, although the relative fortunes of individual companies, and markets, diverged markedly. The main story last month was Artificial Intelligence (AI). Rapid developments in the technology (together with examples of exciting opportunities and potential risks) have caught the attention of the media and public alike. Internet search data shows an exponential pick-up in popularity for search terms relating to AI in recent months. For example, Exploding Topics (an internet search analysis company) suggests that searches for “Generative AI”, such as ChatGPT and Google’s Bard, have increased by 1150% in the last six months. This surge in popularity fed through to the investment community, where investors focused on companies which look set to benefit from the development of Generative AI.

As a result, tech-heavy markets such as the NASDAQ and Taiwan were up 9.3% and 8.9% (in Sterling terms) respectively. At the company level, we witnessed some truly remarkable short-term gains. The clearest example of such performance was Nvidia, a semiconductor company widely regarded as an AI champion. The stock, which is currently a 0.8% position in Witan’s portfolio, gained 36% over the month and was briefly valued at over US$1trillion. As a result, Nvidia became one of only a handful of companies to have ever achieved such a lofty market capitalisation. Whilst Nvidia was the outstanding performer, other large semiconductor companies including Broadcom, Advanced Micro Devices, Applied Materials, TSMC and ASML also gained by over 10% over the month. Of course, share prices can be volatile and rarely rise in a straight line, especially if reliant on meeting exceptional growth expectations. Tesla’s share price, for example, increased thirty-fivefold from its recent low point in 2019 to the 2021 peak, followed by a 65% decline in 2022 and a similar gain of 66% over the first five months of 2023. In contrast to these positive returns, weakness in Chinese demand led to a decline in commodity prices and a commensurate fall in Energy (-7.7%) and Materials (-5.5%) shares. Consumer Staples also fell by over 5%. Regionally, the UK (-5%) and Europe (-4%) were among the laggards, as both markets are overweight in these sectors, while being markedly underweight in technology and related industries.

Last month’s investment activity is highlighted overleaf. One of the aforementioned names, Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Co (TSMC), features as the most bought security by our managers. They also started new positions in Equifax (credit rating agency) and Automatic Data Processing (Payroll and HR services). The holdings in Amphenol (communications components) and Meta Platforms (Facebook) were fully exited during the month.
